Naked cyclists take to the streets of Brighton today in World Naked Bike Ride

By Sofia Diogo Mateus

Last Updated: 6:42PM BST 07/06/2008

Five hundred cyclists stripped off today in Brighton for the third annual World Naked Bike Ride.

The riders were campaigning against cars and their damage to the environment, many using their bodies a display for slogans.

Some just painted their bodies in colour while others featured wigs and hats.

Others stuck to underwear and many just kept to the theme as they cycled the streets, catching the attention of peasants.

Now in its third year, the event has a London counterpart which will take place next weekend.

Since last year Sussex Police has allowed full nudity at the event, which ran smoothly with no reports of any incidents.
